Idyllwild Tree Lighting was a grand event. Once again families and friends gather in the center square to share in the count down for the trees to be lite.

Children young and old where captivated once again by the singing, vendors, and the joyful and jolly visit by the ginger bread man and frosty the snowman.

Once again the count down to the lighting of the trees, mesmerized resident and visitors alike, as it marked the offical start for the 2025 Christmas celebration.

Lara's Revenge Regulation Will Gut Public Participation in Insurance Rate-Making, Consumer Watchdog Says at Hearing Today

Los Angeles, CA - Insurance Commissioner Ricardo Lara's proposal to change the rules that govern consumers' right to scrutinize and challenge unjustified rates would derail the public participation process set up by insurance reform Proposition 103, Consumer Watchdog told the Commissioner in a hearing at 1pm today. Thirty-six public interest organizations also urged Lara to withdraw his proposal.

(Hearing access is available here.)

By giving himself the power to deny compensation to consumers who disagree with his positions, Lara's draft regulation would make it financially impossible for consumers to mount challenges to unjustified and discriminatory rates – a power that Consumer Watchdog has used to save Californians over $6 billion since 2002, at a cost of 25 cents per $100 saved, Consumer Watchdog explained in its analysis.

For example, Consumer Watchdog is presently challenging State Farm's request for a $1.2 billion rate increase the company says it needs to continue to do business in California. Commissioner Lara has already approved a conditional "emergency" rate increase of $749 million.

"If Commissioner Lara's plan goes into effect, no consumer group will be able to afford to challenge insurance companies – or the commissioner – when they propose excessive or unfair rates," said Will Pletcher, Consumer Watchdog's Litigation Director. "The result will be more and larger increases in the premiums Californians pay for home, auto and business insurance."

Read comments by Consumer Watchdog and by thirty-six organizations criticizing the draft regulations.

Insurance Companies Target Compensation for Advocates Who Level the Playing Field

One of the most powerful reforms of Proposition 103 grants consumers the right to enforce and defend Proposition 103's consumer protections in regulatory proceedings at the Department of Insurance and in the courts. To enable consumers to independently review and challenge rates proposed by insurers, Proposition 103 requires the companies to pay a consumer representative (also called an "intervenor") who makes a "substantial contribution" their reasonable legal and expert fees.

Commissioner Lara's proposal would:

Allow him to retroactively deny compensation for consumers' advocacy and witness expenses by applying subjective standards found nowhere in the statute — if he arbitrarily claims the advocacy is "vexatious," "duplicative," "cumulative," "peripheral," "oppositional" or merely "irrelevant," or if he decides that the intervenor has "conflicts of interest" or an "ideological agenda."

Allow the commissioner to veto a consumer representative's "substantial contribution" simply by failing to acknowledge it in a ruling or order he issues.

Arbitrarily cap the number of advocates for which a consumer representative can be compensated (2 lawyers, 1 expert, 1 supervisor, 1 administrative person), while placing no limits on the number of lawyers, lobbyists, and experts an insurance company can hire – at policyholders' expense;

Eliminate the authority of independent Administrative Law Judges to (1) review proposed settlements of administrative challenges over rates; (2) decide requests for compensation by consumer advocates.

Allow insurance companies to interrupt and delay a hearing on a rate challenge by appealing ALJ rulings that they don't like – in the middle of a case – to the commissioner, who would be allowed to override the judge.

Eliminate the requirement that insurance companies that challenge the compensation of consumer representatives must reveal their own legal expenditures in the same proceeding.

Consumer Watchdog concluded that Lara's proposals are unlawful and unconstitutional: they violate Proposition 103 and other state laws that protect the public against renegade actions by government officials, as well as the First Amendment.

"If consumers disagree with the commissioner, they are 'oppositional'; if they agree they are 'duplicative.' Either way they don't get compensated," added Consumer Watchdog staff attorney Ben Powell. "Commissioner Lara is attempting a massive power grab, seizing power from neutral judges who decide cases on their merits, a politicization of the process that flouts judicial norms and the rule of law," Pletcher said.

Lara's proposal on intervenors fees is part of his so-called "Sustainable Insurance Strategy," which has centered on agreeing to the insurance industry's demands for deregulation and higher rates in exchange for a loophole-ridden promise that insurance companies will begin selling home insurance to those who need it, as the New York Times recently reported.

The result has been soaring insurance premiums and a near doubling of enrollment in the California FAIR Plan, which accepts people who can't find residential coverage in the regular market.

Lara has frequently attacked Proposition 103, as well as Consumer Watchdog, one of two nonprofits that currently represent consumers in insurance matters. The last commissioner to "crack down" on the intervenor process, Chuck Quackenbush (1994-2000), proposed similar rules and also criticized Consumer Watchdog; his actions discouraged many other organizations from continuing to participate in the process, as Consumer Watchdog's comments discuss.

In its comments, Consumer Watchdog urged Commissioner Lara to adopt regulations that would enhance the public participation process by making it more transparent, encouraging more participation, and providing more procedural protections for consumer representatives.

Coalition Urges Lara to Withdraw Proposal

Dear Soaring Ones:

This is a month the Lord wants us to recognize the wind! When the wind begins to shift, do not hesitate to pursue a new course for victory. The winds of change can be the key for you to arise and "ride" the Lord's purposes in a whole new way. Today's War Room was a call to SOAR IN THE CHANGING WINDS! Listen for the wind and then allow the Lord to position you to go higher. As you watch this replay, declare His winds of change will blow on you and your storehouse, and that you will recognize His wind in and around you.

American Red Cross - SAVE THIS FOR YOUR CHECK LIST TO DO FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Smoke Alarm installation and home fire prevention information - By appointment

The American Red Cross provides the smoke alarms and installation at no cost to residents. The visit includes discussing home fire prevention information, asking the resident to locate two possible exits, determining a safe meeting place nearby and other tips. Two trained Red Cross volunteers will arrive at the designated time and will work with the resident to locate existing alarms, testing them, then replacing them if needed. The smoke alarms we use do not require the battery to be changed - the battery is sealed within the alarm and has an expected 10-year lifespan.

HOLIDAY FAVORITES

Idyllwild has several select Winery locations to Wine and Dine you throughout this Holiday Season.

THE STAR will be providing Holiday recipes to go with your favorite wines as well as, invite you to discover a few new wines for yourself and for your Holiday guests.

Our first recipe a wonderful traditional salad.
Spinach Salad with Sugared Pecans.

No matter how you say Pecans, this salad is always a wonderful start to your holiday meal and/or served with your favorite breads and an appetizer wine.

Prep time 20 minutes

- 1 1/4 cups pecan halves
- 3/4 cup packed light brown sugar, divided
- 1/4 cup butter or margarine, melted
- 1/2 twp. cinnamon, divided
- 1/2 cup white wine vinegar
- 1/3 cup olive oil
- 1/4 tsp. salt
- 1/4 tsp. freshly cracked pepper
- 2 (7-oz.) pkg. fresh spinach
- 2 ripe pears, thinly sliced
- 1 small red onion, chopped

1. Stir together pecans, 1/2 cup brown sugar, butter and 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon; spread nut mixture on a lightly greased baking sheet.

2. Bake at 325 F for 15 to 20 minutes, stirring often. Cool and break apart.

3. Whisk together white wine vinegar, olive oil, remaining 1/4 cup brown sugar, salt, pepper and remaining 1/4 teaspoon cinnamon in a small bowl; set aside.

4. Combine spinach, pears and onion in a large bowl. Drizzle with vinegar mixture and sprinkle with pecans.

Serves 8

Per Serving: 428 calories, 37 g carbohydrate, 4g protein, 32g fat, 6 g fiber, 15 mg cholesterol, 162 mg sodium.

Wines that go well with a Spinach and Pear Salad are typically crisp and light, such as Sauvignon Blanc, Pinot Grigio, or Riesling. You might also try a California Chardonnay.

Just think what it might have been like back in the early 1900's celebrating a good year on the Contreras Homestead. I'm sure Fanny would of invited friends and family to share a good meal together and since many of the children stayed at her house during the week, she would have wanted them there so she could listen to their chatter Then the years pass and Lincoln and Louise Hamilton purchase the Contreras home and move in. It's reported the Hamiltons enjoyed lots of get-togethers in the years they lived there. I'm sure they invited friends and family over to celebrate and show off that wonderful indoor bathroom.
